 vices to those who may, in the smallest degree, require professional aid; in any disease of the mouth and gums, or in premature decays, and deficiencies of the teeth, from a partial or total loss of one or more of them. Natural and artificial teeth set, without extracting the remaining roots, from one to full sets complete, either with ligatures, springs, pivots, or on plates of gold, and in such a manner as to be useful and highly ornamental. The tartar so injurious to the teeth, which carries blackness and discolouring, removed and the teeth restored to their native whiteness, without the smallest pain, or injury to the enamel. Decayed teeth orrified and plugged, so as to render them useful, and prevent their further decay... Teeth extracted with perfect safety, and every other operation performed, that comes within the line of his profession, to preserve the beauty and soundness of the teeth, and a healthy state of the gums. If tenderness and care in different operations, beauty and elegance in the finishing and setting artificial teeth, and the most implicit candour in his advice, are inducements; those who may honour him with their confidence may be assured of meeting with satisfaction. Any person wishing to be waited on at their residence, will please to send a line or servant.

*Maxwell, Wm. distiller, 73, M'Elderry's wharf. Informs his friends and the public that he has constantly on hand a supply of his own manufactured Gin.—Grocers and others who have not provided themselves with his Gin are reminded that all the purchasers of it, pronounce it, without exception, superior to any other Gin, distilled in this country. Those who are selling this Gin as Holland, though they may not injure its character by so doing, yet they retard its growing reputation, by withholding from their customers its true distinguishing name—Maxwell's Gin. Its intrinsic purity and flavour will always insure them a profitable and ready sale. Brandy of his own manufacture, little inferior to French. Cordials and colouring as usual.*
